"This book, I believe, is the first of its kind, that is to say, the first complete manual yet written on operations between mechanized armies. For many years now I have argued that general tactical training for war demands two books: one dealing with present-day warfare and the other with future warfare. The first of these books is represented by Gt. Brit. War office. Field service regulations, vol. II, the second should be represented by Field service regulations, vol. III—a book which does not exist, but which should exist, and one day no doubt will exist."—Pref.

Chromosome numbers in angiosperms II, by L. O. Gaier. (In: Bibliographia genetica. Copenhagen, 1938. 22^{cm}, doi 18, p. 171-184.)

The present list of chromosome numbers has been prepared to supplement a previous one (Gaier, A list of chromosome numbers in angiosperms. Genetica 5, p. 401-404, 1936) with the results of investigations reported between 1935 and the end of the year 1938. In order that it might be an adequate supplement at the present time, all other references previous to 1935 have been included as well as additions and corrections in the first list covering the period 1935 to 1938. It is planned to publish hereafter, annual supplement lists in Evolution genetica, until such time as their use to workers seems to have expired. — p. 171.

Chromosome numbers in angiosperms IV, by L. O. Gaier. (In: Bibliographia genetica. Copenhagen, 1938. 22^{cm}, doi 18, p. 185-200.)

In preparing this annual publication of chromosome numbers in angiosperms, (see papers published earlier than 1939 and not included in previous lists (Gaier, A list of chromosome numbers in angiosperms. Genetica 5, p. 401-404, 1936; Chromosome numbers in angiosperms II. Bibliographia genetica 6, p. 171-184, 1938; Chromosome numbers in angiosperms III. Genetica 12, p. 101-108, 1938)) have been first considered supplementing the list. Then the main list contains entirely of reports published in 1939. Reports of chromosome numbers published in 1931 and 1932 will be included only after the completion of the list.
